

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A database system includes a plurality of access modules and corresponding persistent storage devices each having a pool of storage elements that can be allocated to store permanent files and temporary files. Each access module is associated with a non-persistent file management context and each storage device contains a persistent file management context. The persistent file management context indicates allocation of permanent files, while the non-persistent file management context indicates the allocation of both permanent and temporary files.

09733530-120500